The transport of peptide substances through biological membranes is of major importance for many physiological processes including taste reception and the activation of hormones, neurotransmitters and enzymes. It is well established that the transport of peptide substances is strongly dependent on the type and composition of the membrane. Further, the behavior of the peptide substance depends on whether it is an anionic or cationic peptide substance. The invention relates to a polymer membrane which is characterized in that it is a mixture of a) a polymer having a hydrophilic part and a hydrophobic part, b) a lipophilic polymer and c) a peptide substance. A peptide substance is a peptide, peptide amide, peptide ester, peptide anhydride and a peptide dimer. In particular, it relates to a peptide substance which bears a functional group which can be bonded to another molecule, preferably to a biologically active molecule. This group can be, in particular, a functional group which can be applied to a biological molecule, an amino group which is covalently bonded to an amino acid residue, a carboxyl group which is covalently bonded to an amino acid residue or a group which can be covalently bonded to any amino acid residue or a group which is covalently
